Us military officer rank comparison

By Chron Contributor Updated September 22, 2020 Military Pilots of the U.S. Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps are all officers commanded and thus are paid on u.S. military payroll tables for officers, which are the same for each branch of service and based on rank and time in service. In addition, soldiers and women who serve as pilots may receive special remuneration allowances, which are also the same in all branches of the military. Most of the pilots who fly helicopters in the army, the fourth branch of the army, are actually officers of command, a rank between soldiers and officers. Officers in 2020, according to the U.S. Air Force, are paid by matching the degree and time of service on the payroll sheet authorized by the National Defense Authorization Act. Military officers shall be classified with a grade starting with an O for the officer and a number representing their step or rank. Although the Navy uses different terminology for its officers, the O-scale rank looks equal in all four branches. For example, an O-1, the lowest rank for an officer, is a sub-lieutenant in the Navy, but an ensign in the Navy. An O-4 is a major in the Air Force, but a lieutenant commander in the Navy, and so on. An O-4 with the same service time is paid the same, whether it's an Army or Navy major or a Navy lieutenant commander. The least experienced pilots would be an O-1 with less than two years of service - probably fresh out of a military academy or other training program - were paid $3,287 a month or $39,444 a year, according to the 2020 base pay table. At the other end of the spectrum, an O-6 - a colonel in the Air Force, for example - with 15 years of service was paid $8,145 a month or $97,740 a year. An officer somewhere in the middle would be an O-3 Air Force captain with six years of experience, is paid $6,128 a month or $73,536 a year. Military pilots are also paid certain allowances or bonuses paid in special circumstances. For example, officials who choose to live outside the base receive a housing allowance based on their place of work, their degree of remuneration and whether or not they have dependants. These benefits vary considerably depending on the costs of the housing in the locality where the pilots are stationed. Military pilots, like other members of the military, also receive food allowances. Officers are also eligible for a cost-of-life allowance if they have been stationed in certain high-cost areas. Finally, some pilots are eligible for special flight pay, such as career incentive pay for long-term aviation officers. This varies considerably, from $150 to $600 month, and some annual bonuses that range from up to $35,000, depending on military benefits.
